

SCENARIO C

Imagine you are notarizing multiple documents for a customer. In the middle of the assignment, you realize you have filled your entire journal — but you still have several more notarizations to record, only now there is no room for anymore entries. You also have not had a chance to get a new journal, but Guam law requires that you record every notarization. As luck would have it, your old co-worker left her journal behind when she quit, because her commission expired.

SCENARIO D

Jun Boi Jurat walks into your office. He does not speak or read English, but you determine that he speaks Filipino (Tagalog). Jun Boi wants a power of attorney notarized, which is written in English. You, the notary, speak a little Tagalog, enough to ask him his name, age, address and proof of ID. The document calls for a jurat.

SCENARIO E

You are asked to notarize a quitclaim deed and power of attorney for an elderly man, who cannot speak (he is old and frail), but he has all his faculties (he understands what is going on). When you arrive, there are numerous family members in the room.

One family member produces the quitclaim deed and power of attorney for notarization. You are then handed the elderly person's passport. You ask the signer's name. You are told it is Tun Juan, and you note from the passport that his age is 94.

You approach Tun Juan and ask how he is feeling. He does not respond. You then ask him if he wants to sign a quitclaim deed and power of attorney. He still does not respond.

A family member says to Tun Juan, “Tata, remember the papers we talked about today. You need to sign the papers. Ok?” Tun Juan looks at you and nods yes. You take the passport. You then ask Tun Juan to sign your journal. Tun Juan’s hand is trembling and his signature is illegible but nonetheless it is a signature. You then give the deed to Tun Juan to sign. He has no strength to sign again. His son offers to help him by supporting and guiding his hand to make a signature.
